

It's deja vu all over again. The status quo fighting the innovator. XM offers its subscribers a top-notch product that we are willing to pay for. If commercial and other broadcasters want us to listen to their stations they should "make" us do so by offering a better product or service, not by limiting our options.

Every time the government gets involved in stifling innovation the general public suffers.

Please, don't get suckered into protecting an industry that needs no protection from consumers. It only needs protection from outmoded ways of doing business